Q&A: Meet Bo Matthews

Recently minted Alpha Country KBAY/San Jose & KKDV/Walnut Creek, CA OM/ PD "Bo Matthews" Gutierrez (CAT 5/23) introduces himself to the Country radio community and sheds light on his plans for the new Bay Area station.

CA: You were just announced in your official capacity last week, but you've been working with the cluster for a few months, correct?

Bo Matthews

BM: It's like I've been the man behind the curtain for a minute. Ha! In October, I was on vacation with my family in Las Vegas, and [Alpha EVP/Content] Phil Becker called and asked me to go over to San Jose, check out the stations and help them tweak some things on what was then Classic Hits. We decided to make some small shifts, and management elected to keep me on with the cluster in addition to my responsibilities as [Alpha/Dayton, OH OM]. I was making monthly trips to San Jose and was excited about everything we were doing with the updated KBAY; then, one Friday afternoon, I got a call to come to town. [San Jose MM] David Drutz told me they had decided to flip KBAY to Country, and I arrived that Monday (4/4).

Who came together to work on the build out?

The team included me, Becker, Drutz, [Albright & O'Malley & Brenner VP/Consulting Partner] Kenny Jay and [Alpha Country KZKX/Lincoln, NE PD] Rob Kelley – who got the call Monday morning and was there by Monday night. We didn't want to tip anyone off, so we sat in the lobby of a Marriott hotel in downtown San Jose constructing everything. When Rob got there, he asked if we were flipping on Friday, and I said, "No, I think we're gonna go tomorrow." We didn't have imaging, a station logo ... nothing. But with what was happening with KRTY [flipping out, CAT 3/23], we knew the first one in would win. Editor's Note: Read more about the decision to flip KBAY to Country from the executives' perspective in last month's (4/11) Country Aircheck Weekly [here.]

Checking In On Mental Health

Directly or indirectly, mental health issues affect everyone, and the reminders can be devastating (Chronicle: Naomi Judd). Short of the tragic, however, ongoing reluctance to discuss these issues can be felt in how powerful it is when people speak up in spite of it. "At the end of 2019 I had a very, very, very hard time with anxiety and depression," says Brothers Osborne's

GOING FOR ADDS NOW

John Osborne in the first of a new series of videos from ACM Lifting Lives. "I thought that was my life, and that's how it was going to be forever. I learned to be okay with not being okay ... just being patient." By all accounts, the need for openness, support and funding has never been greater in country music, and the growing industry response is proving that mental health awareness isn't just a month, it's a mindset.

Tatum Allsep

"In the last 10 years, we've seen the stigma dissipate," says Music Health Alliance Founder/CEO Tatum Allsep. "The Route 91 shooting five years ago threw a lot of that out the door. We were forced to learn. Right before the pandemic there were a number of suicides in our industry and that really brought it to the forefront. Then having to look in the mirror knowing you've lost your income and miss life on the road – depression, anxiety and fear of failure were compounded."

Lyndsay Cruz

During the pandemic, MHA saw a 300% increase in requests for assistance with mental health counseling, assessments and medication. In the course of offering almost $4 million in financial assistance, ACMLL also saw growing mental health concerns. "When we opened the application we asked people to detail how they'd been affected by the pandemic," ACMLL Exec. Dir. Lyndsay Cruz says. "Of course we heard about financial worries, but we also noticed a lot of responses from people who weren't sure they could endure it mentally. Beyond financial security, people wanted to be out with their road families and working. Sitting on the couch and feeling like a failure were common themes."

"The reality of mental health and the creative brain goes back historically to DaVinci and Van Gogh," Allsep says. "When a brain is firing full speed from one side, you have to find balance somewhere. Being creative means you're neuro-diverse in some way, and that's a wonderful thing. We feel very deeply. But we need to take care of brains the same way we do our vocal cords."

Reducing the stigma around mental health and illness is the primary goal of the aforementioned The Check-In series, which features Osborne, Lindsay Ell, Jimmie Allen, Chase Bryant, Brett Eldredge, Michael Ray, Caitlyn Smith and more.

"Lindsay said it perfectly about the importance of speaking out and normalizing feelings of anxiety and depression," Cruz says.

Unfortunately, even those with health insurance can be stymied in seeking assistance. "Most of the best counselors don't take insurance because the reimbursement rate is so low," Allsep explains. "We knew we needed to support treatments that were clinically proven, and we determined the average range nationwide was $85 to $150 per session – depending on experience. That means $1,000 can enable about 10 counselor visits."

Thankfully, resources are available and support for MHA's efforts has been widespread. A referral from MusicBiz brought a connection with Godsmack's Sully Erna and his suicide-prevention-focused Scars Foundation. "CMA donated money," Allsep says. "Ray Fulcher has a foundation and he was next. ACM Lifting Lives has been a tremendous collaboration in building something sustainable to help the industry." Seek assistance from MHA here.

As ACMLL pivots from COVID relief, mental health is the focus both for individuals and organizations. "Funding is available for anyone in the country music community, either as a direct grant on their behalf to their provider, or to support organizations and programs that promote healing," Cruz says. Apply as an individual here, or as an organization here.

Likewise, CMA is in the midst of an ongoing mental health webinar series, with part one titled "Managing Stress And The Return From The Pandemic" (watch here). Part two is titled "Mental Health 101" (watch here). "Building Healthy Relationships" (July 14) and "Coping With How Life's Challenges Show Up" (Sept. 20) are on deck. An aggregation of resources for those needing help in a multitude of areas is available through CMA here.

"It's so easy to think you're on an island, but you are not alone," Allsep says. "Resources are available to anyone who makes their living in this business, including in radio. Everything discussed is completely confidential. Please ask for help." -Chuck Aly

We are all the same. We've gone through a lot in this country the last two years. We are all doing this together. We all have struggles even though they are different. (continued from page 1)

Operating so quickly and secretively, how did you collaborate?

It was almost like we were sending in the Navy Seals or a covert ops team. We went from having nothing to being on-air by 3pm that next day (CAT 4/5). It was magical. Rob brought in the initial music database we could pull from, I was downloading music, and Kenny also gave me some selections. We worked off a master list of tasks that needed to be completed – building a website, designing a logo –

OFF THE RECORD

MCA's Jordan Davis goes Off The Record:

When I was growing up in Shreveport, it was Country radio only. In the car, at my dad's shop, in the house. The station I remember the most is KISS Country 93.7 [KXKS].

The first time I heard my song on radio (without knowing it was about to play) was in Houston. I was with Miranda McDonald from my label sitting in a Sprouts parking lot.

Miranda knew it was going to be played, but I had no clue. It played after Carrie [Underwood] "Before He Cheats," and I remember thinking, "I know this intro ... what song is this?" Then it hit me. I still to this day get fired up when I'm driving around and hear one of my songs come on. It's a pretty awesome feeling.

The biggest lessons I learned throughout the pandemic professionally was work-life balance. I had gotten to a place where work and music was in front of a few things on the priorities list that they shouldn't have been in front of. As a husband and a new dad, I should've been excited about some extra time at home, yet all I could think about was getting back out and playing music or worrying when that was going to be possible.

Personally, I was faced with how selfish I had been the past couple years with my career. That was not a fun thing to see, but I was at least able to see it and fix it.

When it comes to balancing work and family, the main thing is priorities. Kristen and I have set times each week where we get someone to watch the kids and go do something just us. My daughter and I have a dad/daughter day each week I'm home, as well. When you don't have as much time at home, you have to be more mindful of the hours you have off the road. I'm still figuring it out, but I feel like we are in a good spot right now.

"What My World Spins Around" is a song about how much my life has changed in the past five years. My world five years ago was nothing but trips, fishing and hunting, and while I still love all those things, my family has taken top spot over all of that.

What I'm listening to right now – any genre – is anything from Foy Vance. Holly Humberstone is awesome, and Ben Rector's The Joy Of Music is one of the best records I've heard in a long time

This year, we wrapped up the Buy Dirt Tour, which was awesome and exceeded my expectations. Every show was packed, and every night seemed better than the last. Touring with Brooks & Dunn has been unreal ... something I never thought I would be able to do, but I'm honored to be out with two country music legends. Also, really stoked for the Luke Combs tour this fall.

We are about to send out "What My World Spins Around" to radio and hoping for a new record not long after that. Really pumped about the response to the new single already and ready to hear it on the radio!

and everyone was feeding pieces onto my hard drive. Everyone had their area of focus, and we had to have the confidence in each other to get it done. From there, I created six-hour blocks with Adobe Audition on my laptop, broke it up into 30-minute chunks, labeled them with generic file names, and sent them to a Google drive. The engineer onsite loaded the pieces in chunks instead of having individual music files with song titles and artist names that would tip off what was happening. It was honestly one of the most fun things I've ever done! This team is like The Avengers, and the only pressure and sense of anxiety came from doing it fast but making sure we had something on-air we'd be proud of out of the gate.

Were you concerned about your own lack of Country programming experience?

Because of the team we assembled, I was fully confident me not coming from a Country background would not be problematic. Instead, I was excited! Most people know me as having done several different formats, but not Country. My wife, Tina, has always asked if I'd ever do Country, and with this opportunity, it felt right. I wasn't looking for a gig! This was initially going to be a transitional period where I would work as part of the team, but it has been some of the most fun I've had in my entire career, and I actively pursued the opportunity to take on the role full-time.

How did you land in Nashville? And did being here play into your desire to explore Country?

Tina and I moved to Nashville more than a year ago. Our kids are both out of the house and had moved to the area – our son is a songwriter/producer, and our daughter is attending MTSU to study Music Business – so I asked Alpha about the possibility of relocating and running my Dayton cluster remotely. With technology being what it is now, and the ability to hop a flight to be in the market as often as I needed, they didn't have a problem with it. Since moving here, I've been surrounded by the Country community. But also, so many people I worked with in past jobs have transitioned to Country – Rod Phillips, Clay Hunnicutt, Joey Tack, Kasper, multiple on-air people and several label reps – and so many people have said, "Dude, you've gotta come to Country." This all felt like the perfect storm, and I knew it was time. If I don't have the answer, I know I have a smart friend somewhere who can help me find what I need to know.
